

CAME Voice/Voix

Canadian Medical Education Journal

We are pleased to announce the re-emergence of the only Canadian journal for medical educators and scholars. A new issue of the Canadian Medical Education Journal (www.cmej.ca) is now available and we are definitely back in business.

The current issue showcases several very exciting articles with strong Canadian content and implications for medical education across the globe. From BC to the Rock, authors and editors from across Canada have made this issue possible. Our material covers stress and resilience, education opportunities, and clinical skills training for medical student as well as research training, intimidation and harassment, burnout, and job prospects for residents. A provocative editorial (Is medical education hazardous to your health?) heads up this collection of articles. This issue will be an entertaining and informative read.

This issue is also our first under new management. Our founding editor, Claudio Violato, retired from the University of Calgary in the spring of 2013 and our original managing editor, Tina Vonhof, retired in the summer of 2014. Since then we have been re-establishing the journal. We now have a new Managing Editor, Jennifer O'Brien and have secured a modest publication grant from the University of Saskatchewan. We have recruited and are recruiting additional qualified and dedicated Associate Editors from across Canada. We expect to publish again in the spring and fall of 2015 and are moving to three and then four issues per year within the next few years.

One last thought: academic journals only succeed with authors, reviewers and editors so please consider giving us a hand with this bold Canadian adventure.

Do check out this issue and feel free to provide feedback [cmej.editor@usask.ca]. Again, you will find it at www.cmej.ca.

Marcel D'Eon, MEd, PhD
Interim Editor-in-chief
University of Saskatchewan