

CAME Voice/Voix

A year of the CAME Voice

Rachel Ellaway, VOICE Editor, Rachel.ellaway@ucalgary.ca

Here we are at the end of another academic year. We have seen many developments in medical education in 2015-2016 including ongoing development and adoption of competency-medical education, and the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada with its specific challenges to medical schools and educators. We have met as a community at conferences such as CCME in Montréal and ICRE in Vancouver, and we have collaborated through initiatives such as CanMEDS 2015 and the ongoing rollout of the Future of Medical Education in Canada (FMEC) project. We have been busy in our own programs and projects in and around medical education, as well as teaching, learning, assessing, evaluating, researching, and leading across the continuum and beyond.

The Voice is now 2 years old. We published 38 articles in this community blog this year that captured much of the diversity of medical education in Canada, including reviews, announcements, and thought pieces from educators, scholars, students, and leaders from across the country. We are now looking forward to our 3rd year of the Voice and we would like to extend an open invitation to the Canadian medical education community to submit articles on the things you or others are doing or thinking about that are of interest to the Canadian medical education community. Writing should be in conversational CBC English or Radio Canada French. We edit for flow and house style but other than that you're completely free to tackle any issue or to use any voice you want; creativity is most definitely encouraged.

The Voice will be back for the 2016-2017 academic year in September, have a great summer!

Back issues of the Voice can be found here http://www.came-acem.ca/pubs_CAME-VOICE-VOIX_en.php